

A Values-Based System For Team Building

Synopsis

When the values of individual group members and their organizations are compatible, synergy can develop and the group can become a real team. This presentation focuses on values-based strategies that accelerate progression through the typical stages of team development.

The presentation will be customized to incorporate the values of the organization and/or the theme of the conference or meeting.

Benefits

1. To understand the impact of personal values on the team building process.
2. To learn how to leverage the synergy that develops when team members work together rather than as individuals.
3. To learn how to transform any workplace or organizational group into a functional and effective team that shares and is motivated by the same values.
4. To learn how to increase team effectiveness and cohesiveness by respecting and taking advantage of individual team member behavior styles.
5. To understand the progressive stages of team development and how each stage can either challenge or support team synergy.

David Hayes

David Hayes is a dynamic and seasoned seminar leader, keynote speaker and management consultant. David is noted for making entertaining, thought-provoking and motivational presentations to large conference audiences as well as conference breakout workshops.

David specializes in workplace issues such as customer service, team building, supervisory skills, diversity management and workplace violence.

David will customize his presentation to maximize the benefits to your meeting or organization. His presentations are infused with his "values-based" system for understanding and addressing key workplace and organizational issues.