

Values-Based Leadership Strategies

Synopsis

Organizational values are the primary reason for differences in the way leadership is handled in the private sector versus the public sector. Personal values and personal leadership can make the difference between success and failure in either environment..

The presentation will be customized to incorporate the values of the organization and/or the theme of the conference or meeting.

Benefits

1. To learn how to improve leadership effectiveness through an understanding of both organizational and personal values.
2. To examine the relationship between leadership, power, and motivation.
3. To learn how to motivate others through the development of proven personal leadership strategies.
4. To learn how to be an effective leader even when there is no official authoritative or supervisory relationship with other team members.
5. To learn secrets of "shared leadership" when conducting meetings or engaging in creative problem solving.

David Hayes

David Hayes is a dynamic and seasoned seminar leader, keynote speaker and management consultant. David is noted for making entertaining, thought-provoking and motivational presentations to large conference audiences as well as conference breakout workshops.

David specializes in workplace issues such as customer service, team building, supervisory skills, diversity management and workplace violence.

David will customize his presentation to maximize the benefits to your meeting or organization. His presentations are infused with his "values-based" system for understanding and addressing key workplace and organizational issues.